2017 Could Be Banner Foliage Year

Sep 26, 2017

Autumn in New England is a cascade of colors. It's a season treasured by many for its sights and scents, but questions linger every year: where are the best colors and when is the best time to see them? Vibrant colors essentially come from healthy trees, and it takes a keen eye to find them. One of the detectives on the case is David Orwig, who makes it his job to survey the health of the forest. He discusses protecting foliage with our Pete Bouchard. He says you want warm days and cool, but not cold, nights. Pests are the other worry. But Jim Salge, a photographer, says this could be a banner year for foliage.

From: http://www.necn.com/on-air/as-seen-on/NECN-9pm-fall-foliage_NECN-448095923.html